Kachel 2 Gen Z @ work in the "pigital age"

Comment: structure and language support – Level 2

Structure:	Language support:
Introduction + thesis • Make your readers familiar with the topic you are about to comment on. The introduction should lead to your thesis which is where you express your opinion on the matter, here: Stillman's view.	some X claim/argue that … one might wonder/ask/doubt regarding/in regard to … according to … in my view/opinion … I hold the view that … I (strongly) believe/support the idea …
1st argument, related to thesis: reason/argument/example • Start each paragraph with a topic sentence that gives the reader an exact idea of what you are about to talk about in this paragraph. Continue with examples or explanations on this one matter (one idea per paragraph). 2nd argument, related to thesis: reason/argument/example • See above. (3rd argument, related to thesis: reason/argument/example) • See above.	starting off/out … first/second/third, … furthermore/also/in addition/additionally/moreover/next, … therefore/that is why/for this reason … as a result/consequence … for example/for instance … as one can see …
Possible counterargument(s): reason(s)/argument(s)/example(s) • A counterargument contradicts what you have argued before and shows that you are aware of both sides of the coin. It helps to convince your readers of your point of view when you refute or mitigate the counterarguments immediately afterwards or when they are clearly weaker than the pro-arguments.	on the one hand, … on the other hand, … however/nevertheless/nonetheless, … yet/but/still … despite this/in spite of this … although … in contrast to … regardless of …
Conclusion • Here you summarize your argumentation and briefly refer back to your thesis from the beginning, e.g. by rephrasing it. The conclusion must follow logically from your arguments and there should not be any new aspects in it.	to put it in a nutshell, … in conclusion/summary, … taking everything into consideration, … finally/lastly/in the end, … all things considered, … all in all/summing up/to sum up, … …